

Media Arts Program

A 12-week vocational track in podcast and media production – taught by the studio that does it for a living.

12-WEEK TRACK

THREE MODULES

PODCAST & MEDIA PRODUCTION

WHY THIS, WHY NOW

You've already proven the model.

The Center's vocational model already works – a fixed number of weeks, real equipment, real work to point to, and a warm handoff into a paid job. Culinary Arts proved it. This is the media version.

Podcasting and media production are hiring right now – editors, audio producers, ad ops coordinators, social/video cutters – and almost none of it requires a degree. We'd like to build the program with you, run the instruction, and hand your team a Media Arts track for your vocational lineup.

THE SHAPE OF IT

12 WEEKS	3 MODULES	300 TRAINING HOURS	3 COHORTS PER YEAR
--------------------	---------------------	------------------------------	------------------------------

THE PROGRAM

Twelve weeks, three modules, one cohort at a time.

Prep before production, production before promotion – the order students actually need to make something real and get it in front of an audience.

Planning, Strategizing & Prep

WEEKS 1-5 • MODULE 1

Show concept, format, and audience strategy; interview prep and story structure; mic technique and studio workflow. No prior experience assumed. By week 5: a fully developed show concept and pilot outline, ready to record.

Production & Editing

WEEKS 6-9 • MODULE 2

Recording real episodes on studio equipment, then the full editing workflow – cutting, sound, pacing – through to a finished mix. By week 9: a finished, edited episode with the student's name in the credits.

Marketing & Distribution

WEEKS 10-12 • MODULE 3

Publishing and RSS, audience growth, the basics of ad operations, and social/video clipping – then a portfolio review and a conversation about next steps. By week 12: a published episode, a real portfolio, and a placement conversation.

WHO'S TEACHING IT

Working producers, not guest speakers.

Strategy & growth

Show concept, interviewing, and distribution – taught by senior Straw Hut staff who record, edit, and grow shows for entertainment and streaming clients every week, confirmed for each cohort.

Production & editing

Our working post-production team, teaching the craft they practice weekly and reviewing every student's cut personally.

WHERE IT LEADS

A real next step, not a certificate.

- A finished portfolio: a solo piece, a published episode, and production credits.
- A placement conversation in week 12, backed by real production credits – not a classroom exercise.
- Direct pathways into editor, producer, and ad-ops roles across the podcast industry – an industry that's hiring, and rarely asks for a degree.

INVESTMENT

Built to fit a vocational-program grant.

Studio Build-Out

$25,000 · ONE-TIME

Recording stations, editing lab, video kit, and flexible furniture – a space that can actually run the program.

Media Arts Program

$28,000–$35,000 · PER COHORT

The full 12-week track for one cohort, instruction and curriculum included. $84–105K if run as three cohorts a year.

First cohort, all-in

≈ $53,000–60,000

Build-out plus the first cohort – squarely in vocational-grant range. A full year at three cohorts runs $109,000–130,000 all-in, with the space already paid for every year after.

NEXT STEP

Let's see if this fits.

We'd plan toward a 2027 start, on whatever timeline works around everything the Center already has going. Happy to walk your vocational programs team through this in person, adjust the structure to whatever's realistic for your space and students, and find the right window.

CONTACT

Ryan Tillotson

STRAW HUT MEDIA · LOS ANGELES

ryan@strawhutmedia.com · 760.807.7138

Prepared by Straw Hut Media for the Los Angeles LGBT Center — August 2026.